Let us suppose, therefore, that the government is entirely at one with the people and never thinks of exerting any power of coercion unless in agreement with what it conceives to be their voice. But I deny the right of the people to exercise such coercion, either by themselves or by their government. The power itself is illegitimate. The best government has no more title to it than the worst.

It is as noxious, or more noxious, when exerted in accordance with public opinion than when in opposition to it. If all mankind minus one were of one opinion, and only one person were of the contrary opinion, mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person than he, if he had the power, would be justified in silencing mankind. Were an opinion a personal possession of no value except to the owner, if to be obstructed in the enjoyment of it were simply a private injury, it would make some difference whether the injury was inflicted only on a few persons or on many. But the peculiar evil of silencing the expression of an opinion is that it is robbing the human race; posterity as well as the existing generation; those who dissent from the opinion still more than those who hold it.

If the opinion is right, they are deprived of the opportunity of exchanging error for truth; if wrong, they lose what is almost as great a benefit, the clearer perception and livelier impression of truth, produced by its collision with error. It is necessary to consider separately these two hypotheses, each of which has a distinct branch of the argument corresponding to it. We can never be sure, that the opinion we are endeavouring to stifle is a false opinion, and if we were sure, stifling it would be an evil still.

First, the opinion which is being attempted to be suppressed by the authorities may possibly, be true. Those who desire to suppress it, of course, deny its truth; but they are not infallible. They have no authority to decide the question for all mankind and exclude every other person from the means of judging. To refuse a hearing to an opinion because they are sure that it is false is to assume that their certainty is the same thing as absolute certainty.

106. Which of the following best embodies the author's basic position in this passage ?

- (A) Majority opinions should always govern policymaking.
- (B) Neither governments nor majorities have the legitimate right to silence dissenting opinions.
- (C) Silencing opinions is acceptable only when the majority thinks so.
- (D) Truth is always self-explanatory and needs not be discussed.

107. "We can never be sure, that the opinion we are endeavouring to stifle is a false opinion."

The author's argument in the above sentence primarily supports which of the following claims ?

- (A) Minority views do not deserve a hearing from the authorities.
- (B) Suppressing opinions is justified because the authorities know better.
- (C) Those who try to suppress alternative opinions are themselves fallible, their refusal to let opinions be heard is unjustified.
- (D) Silencing an opinion is not harmful if the majority agrees.

108. According to the passage, why is silencing an opinion regarded as especially harmful ?

- (A) It reduces the government's financial resources.
- (B) It causes social unrest immediately.
- (C) It inevitably proves the falsity of an opinion.
- (D) It robs not only the present generation but posterity of truth or the means to test truth.

Direction (Q. No. 114 – 121) : Read the following passage and answer the following questions.

The present outlook of human affairs is one that admits of broad generalisations and that seems to require broad generalisations. We are in one of those phases of experience which has become cardinal in history. A series of immense and tragic events have shattered self-complacency and challenged the will and intelligence of mankind. That easy and general forward movement of human affairs which for several generations had seemed to justify the persuasion of a necessary and invincible progress, progress towards greater powers, greater happiness, and a continual enlargement of life, has been checked violently and perhaps arrested altogether.

It was only in the nineteenth century that the large-scale production of cast steel and the growth of chemical knowledge made the military use of a variety of explosives practicable. The systematic extension of human power began in the eighteenth century with the utilisation of steam and coal. That opened a crescendo of invention and discovery which thrust rapidly increasing quantities of material energy into men's hands. Even now, that crescendo may not have reached its climax.

We need not rehearse here the familiar story of the abolition of distance that ensued; how the radiogram and the telegram have made every event of importance a simultaneous event for the minds of everyone in the world; how journeys which formerly took months or weeks now take days or hours; nor how printing and paper have made possible a universally informed community, and so forth. Nor shall we describe the effect of these things upon warfare. The point that concerns us here is this: that before this age of discovery, communities had fought and struggled with each other much as naughty children might do in a crowded nursery, within the measure of their strength. They had hurt and impoverished each other, but they had rarely destroyed each other completely. Their squabbles may have been distressing, but they were tolerable.

But into this nursery has come Science, and has put into the fists of these children razor blades with poison on them, bombs of frightful explosive, corrosive fluids and the like. The comparatively harmless conflicts of these infants are suddenly fraught with quite terrific possibilities, and it is only a question of sooner or later before the nursery becomes a heap of corpses or is blown to smithereens. A real nursery invaded by a reckless person distributing such gifts would be promptly saved by the intervention of the nurse; but humanity has no nurse but its own poor wisdom. And whether that poor wisdom can rise to the pitch of effectual intervention is the most fundamental problem in mundane affairs at the present time.

We are discussing the prevention of wars, disorders, shortages, famines and miseries for centuries ahead. The initial capital we have to go upon is as yet no more than the aroused understanding and conscience of a few thousands, at most a few score thousands of people. Can so little a leaven leaven so great a lump? Is a response to this appeal latent in the masses of mankind? Is there anything in history to justify hope for so gigantic a mental turnover in our race?

114. "Can so little a leaven leaven so great a lump?"

The word 'leaven' in the above sentence most nearly means

- (A) Weight
- (B) Burden
- (C) Obstacle
- (D) Catalyst or agent of change

- (D) Delayed

Direction (Q. No. 122 – 130) : Read the following passage and answer the following questions.

I am by birth a Genevese, and my family is one of the most distinguished of that republic. My ancestors had been, for many years, counsellors and syndics, and my father had filled several public situations with honour and reputation. He was respected by all who knew him for his integrity and indefatigable attention to public business. He passed his younger days perpetually occupied by the affairs of his country; a variety of circumstances had prevented his marrying early, nor was it until the decline of life that he became a husband and the father of a family.

As the circumstances of his marriage illustrate his character, I cannot refrain from relating them. One of his most intimate friends was a merchant who, from a flourishing state, fell, through numerous mischances, into poverty.

This man, whose name was Beaufort, was of a proud and unbending disposition and could not bear to live in poverty and oblivion in the same country where he had formerly been distinguished for his rank and magnificence. He retreated, therefore, with his daughter, to Lucerne. There he lived, unknown and in wretchedness.

My father loved Beaufort. He was deeply saddened by his friend's situation. He went to seek him out, in the hope of persuading him to begin the world again through his assistance. Ten months passed before my father discovered where he lived. He found his old friend sunk in his grief, lying in bed, incapable of any activity.

Beaufort's daughter attended him with great tenderness, but she saw that their funds were rapidly decreasing. They had no other prospect of support, but Caroline Beaufort was brave, and her courage rose to support them in their adversity. She took menial jobs and managed to earn enough to keep the two of them alive. Unfortunately, her father grew worse. In a matter of months, he died in his daughter's arms. Caroline was left an orphan. My father came to the poor girl like a guardian angel. He was determined to take care of her. He brought her to Geneva and placed her under the protection of a relative. Two years after this event, Caroline became his wife.

There was a considerable difference between the ages of my parents, but this circumstance seemed only to unite them. My father was very attached to my mother. He tried to shelter her, as a fair exotic is sheltered by the gardener from the rougher winds. He sought to surround her with all that could excite pleasurable emotion in her soft and benevolent mind. Her health, and even the tranquillity of her spirit, had been shaken by what she had gone through.

122. "There was a considerable difference between the ages of my parents, but this circumstance seemed only to unite them."

The best rephrasing of the above sentence is

- (A) Their ages were almost the same, yet that fact divided them.
- (B) They had a small age difference, and it separated them.
- (C) The large age gap between them appeared to bring them closer.
- (D) Because they were the same age, they were united.
